Chapter 1 by Sean Peacock

On the ground was Chara. A human from the surface. She was badly hurt and shot her head up as she heard walking coming from a nearby hallway and looked in that direction. A silhouette of some kind of animal approaching. Chara backed up on the sight of it and ran into the wall, she was trapped.

Then the thing talked to her and said, "I mean no harm to you, human".

"What are you. Who are you." Chara said with a worried tint.

"My name is Asriel" As a goat entered the room standing on two feet wearing a shirt exactly like the green and yellow shirt she was wearing. Under this it felt like she was in some book of sorts. She had to much information to take in and was so tired as she climbed Mt. Ebott for an hour and as she heard Asriel say "What is your name" As she fell to sleep.

She woke up to a particular smell. Asriel walked into the room with two pieces of butterscotch cinnamon pie. Chara looked at her with a smile. Asriel handed over a piece and asked,

"What is your name?"

Chara felt happy for the first time. She placed her blankets roughly on the bed and walked out. Chara followed Asriel into a closet and grabbed two sheets of paper and a set of crayons. They walked outside onto a plain of grass.

"What are you going to draw, Chara?"

"You."

"Uh, Ok!"

Asriel drew a chaos laser pointing to a heart in a box. Chara drew a flower with yellow petals, a white center and a face. Asriel said,

"That isn't me!"

Chara laughed and started to draw yellow marks on her face.

"Stop!"
